Dear David:

FYI
Historic Hawaii Foundation sent the attached e-mail out this afternoon which describes the Rail Project as endangering 31 historic sites along the transit corridor and illustrates the stories about this issue with pictures of Aloha Tower and the Dillingham Building.

Hope this is helpful in case you get questions about what we are doing to protect historic resources “threatened” by the project.

Historic Hawai'i Foundation's annual list of the most endangered historic sites in Hawai'i is dominated by irreplaceable sites and settings that help define Hawai'i.

"This year's list includes buildings, archeological sites, cultural landscapes, and sacred places," said Kiersten Faulkner, executive director. "Each is unique to Hawai'i and each helps perpetuate our unique heritage."

Those endangered places include a 17-acre cultural compound in North Kohala; four of the last plantation-era homes on Hale'iwa's main thoroughfare; 12 buildings on the campus of the Waimano Training Ridge and Hospital; and the entire 20-mile corridor proposed for Honolulu's rapid transit system. The transit corridor - perhaps the most controversial addition to the list - is included because the aesthetics of the system may fundamentally alter the context of some of the historic sites and distinctive communities along the route.

"The common denominator is that each of the places is significant for its contribution to the identity of its community, and how these places reflect the ethnic, cultural and historic diversity we treasure in Hawai'i," Faulkner said. "The loss of these places would change our understanding of the cultural landscapes, and rob our future."

Aloha Tower <http://www.historichawaii.org/Historic_Sites/RT/26alohasmall.jpg> In what the City & County of Honolulu hopes On what the City and County of Honolulu hopes will be the final negotiations on the Federal and State reviews for the rail's impacts on historic properties, Historic Hawai'i Foundation (HHF) continues to support and recommend solutions to mitigate and minimize the effects on the historic properties affected by the rail's proposed route.

As an outcome of the review process, the currently proposed Programmatic Agreement (PA) includes a determination of adverse effect on 31 historic properties within the corridor and requires the City to provide additional investigation into traditional cultural properties that might also be affected.
